My biggest irritant that I experienced was when Adobe decided to remove functionality that wasn't widely used. I know that they weren't meant to be used to remain compatible with a new version of the software. However, in a release like this, it'd be nice to offer an "upgrade" option, and for the software to function as a standalone editor. I have worked with several iterations of PS at Apple, and I must say that it is still one of the best suites available. I was surprised at the advances in the iPad version, and very pleased with the results. I'd recommend it to anyone for a quick fix, a one-person or small team project, or even as a way to share with others what you are creating. Adobe's presentation of the new Photoshop may have been a bit confusing, as they have tripped over themselves with display resolution. This, however, may just be a rehearsal for the final show. After all, Photoshop Elements 2021 has had remarkably similar (if not the same) screen size, and it is very easy for the update to come with the final (and biggest) jump in resolution. In fact, the benefit of Vimeo is that it provides an asset that's ownership can't offer. If you want a watermark, you buy it and it's yours and you can record the video multiple times. But if you want to make a living-- or a hobby--by making videos, you have to create something that can be bought. Vimeo allows us to create content that is free and can be bought at any price. I am simply asking for a version of the Photoshop that can handle editing RAW images without saving the new file as an image. I can use any RAW editor, and even have the in-WB gamma and color spaces set up correctly.
