Backup (29), CD DVD (21), Converter (17), Data Compression (8), Desktop (37) .Q: ASP.NET Web API V2 vs ASP.NET MVC V3 (No Data Presentation) Performance I am currently developing my new asp.net Web API 2.2 application. I would like to use asp.net mvc v3 for the presentation and data abstraction layer. This has been a real change from asp.net MVC 2.2. It is a real WOW for me. It's just amazing that you need nothing more that any html, css and js for the presentation of your web pages. You don't need any server-side script, just code and HTML. There isn't a ViewEngine or ViewPage class. They just delivered what the web was designed to deliver. It's great, very productive and scalable (no viewstate, databinding and all that other stuff). The question is: How does this affect performance. In our legacy application we use.net (1.1, 2.0) we have at our disposal. This is a time when we decided to port everything to.net framework 4.0. We have also the new shiny Microsoft Framework. There is no comparison in performance between the 2 frameworks. The performance is just so great and way better than.net 1.1 and.net 2.0. We have a mix of normal MVC controllers and also ASHX-Http handlers. But so far we have only used the new ASP.NET MVC 3.0 Controller and Action Filters to abstract things. So the presentation of our resources is not much different than the previous asp.net MVC 2.0. The question is: Will I have performance issues with ASP.NET MVC 3 or will it keep performance with very little ViewEngine and ViewPage code. A: I dont know the details of the implementation of ASP.NET MVC 3, but I would expect it to be very good.
